DRINKWARE Flair

Terminology

Having drinkware that is insulated helps to keep your beverages at just the right temperature. Here are some different types of insulation you can expect to find.

BPA-Free: Items that have been successfully tested for compliance with Connecticut's BPA Free Law.

Hot & Cold Hours: Indicates the number of hours a beverage container will maintain liquids hot or cold, based on our quality testing.

Leak-Proof: Does not let any liquid out when completely turned upside down. Perfect for gym, suitcase/bag ready.

Sweat-Proof: Does not show any condensation. Keep your hands dry.

Spill-Resistant: Has a lid mechanism that prevents big spills should the cup tip. Perfect for on the go, travel mug kept in hand or on desk.

Tritan® material: Tritan® from Eastman is a durable clear, BPA-free plastic with a clear glass-like look and feel. It is a durable plastic that retains its color and gloss even after hundreds of dishwasher cycles.

Stainless Steel with Inner Copper: These 2 metals are very efficient together. The combination of both helps to maintain liquids hot or cold longer than regular stainless steel.

Stainless Steel 18/8 Grade: 18% Chromium/8% Nickel, also known as 302 or 304 grade Stainless Steel. Chromium binds oxygen to the surface of the product to protect the iron from oxidation (rust). Nickel enhances the corrosion resistance of stainless steel. The higher the nickel content, the more resistant the stainless steel is to corrosion.

Aluminum: More lightweight than other metals, and looks similar to stainless steel.

PET (Polyethylene Terephthalate): Most bottles are made from PET plastic. It is used to make many common household items. PET has an excellent level of wear resistance compared to other plastics.

Insulation Information

In many containers, heat or cold finds its way in and out through convection. Containers with vacuum insulation will create an airless space between the walls. This will stop the convection process, which eliminates any change in temperature. This allows for your beverages to remain icy cold or steaming hot longer.

Outer Wall

Vacuum insulation

Inner Wall

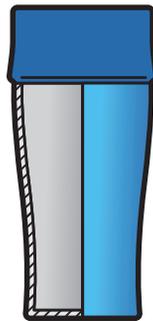

Insulation Guide

Having drinkware that is insulated helps to keep your beverages at just the right temperature. Here are some different types of insulation you can expect to find.

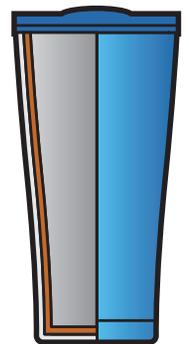

Air Insulation
Air between inner & outer walls.

Foam Insulation
Foam between inner & outer walls.

Vacuum Insulation
No air between inner & outer walls.

Copper Vacuum Insulation
No air between inner & outer walls + copper plated inner wall adds a layer of temperature retention.

APPAREL TERMS

YARN & FIBER TERMS

CARDED YARN (KP)

A cotton yarn which has gone through a cleaning process which leaves a wide range of fiber lengths. Carded yarns are not as uniform as combed yarns.

COMBED YARN (CP)

A cotton yarn which contains straighter and longer fibers for better uniformity and strength. An additional “combing” step is conducted on carded yarn to extract foreign matter and fibers shorter than 1 1/8". This results in a more uniform and smoother yarn.

COTTON

A natural fiber that grows in the seed pod of a cotton plant. Fibers are typically 1/2 inch to 2 inches long. The longest staple fibers produce the highest quality cotton fabrics.

NYLON

A manufactured fiber, known for its strength and excellent resilience. Nylon has superior abrasion resistance and high flexibility.

OPEN END SPUN (OE)

Created through a spinning process that blows cotton fibers into a rapidly spinning turbine that wraps the fibers around themselves. OE Yarn is spun at exceptionally higher speeds than Ring Spun yarns which results in a lower cost yarn.

ORGANIC COTTON

Cotton that is grown without the use of toxic pesticides and synthetic fertilizers.

PIMA COTTON

A premium cotton that has very fine, strong, and long fibers which makes for a superior fabric with lustrous appearance and soft hand.

POLYESTER

A manufactured fiber introduced in the early 1950's, having high strength, excellent resiliency, high abrasion resistance and rapid drying.

RECYCLED POLYESTER (PET)

PET is the abbreviated name for Polyethylene Terephthalate, the polymer used to create plastic soda bottles. Recycled soda bottles can be processed and converted into polyester fibers that are knit into apparel fabrics.

RING SPUN (RS)

Created through a process of spinning that continuously twists and elongates the cotton fibers into a single strand of yarn. Ring spun process yields a noticeably softer, stronger and more durable cotton yarn that is primarily used in premium apparel.

SPANDEX

A manufactured elastomeric fiber that can be repeatedly stretched without breaking and still recover to its original length.

YARN COUNT

Often referred to as “Singles”. The number of “hanks” of yarn it takes to create 1 pound of yarn. One hank is about 840 yards long. If it takes 30 hanks to create 1 pound of yarn, then a single yarn from this would be read as 30/1(thirty singles). The higher the yarn count, the finer the yarn. For example, a 30/1 yarn is a finer yarn than a 20/1 yarn. A finer yarn typically produces a tighter stitch density and a lighter weight fabric.

DRINKWARE CASE STUDY

Client: Textbook Publisher

Purpose: Networking

A textbook publisher signed up to sponsor a pop-up coffee cart during finals week at a local university. The publisher wanted to build awareness of their brand as well as expand their network of on-campus contacts.

On the first day of finals week, a Koozie® Camron tumbler was delivered to each member of the faculty and staff, encouraging them to bring it to the cart for a free coffee fill-up. The publisher had sales staff at the cart during class hours to interact with visitors and provide additional information on their products. The publisher was able to successfully grow their database of educators and set up dozens of follow-up sales calls as a result of the sponsorship campaign.

WRITING INSTRUMENTS CASE STUDY

Client: Quick Care Clinic

Purpose: Promote a new text service

A pharmacy quick care clinic was launching a “sign up for wellness” campaign to promote a text service. Patients who signed up for the program would receive text alerts and have access to text prescription questions directly to the pharmacy. One threat to the program was the older average age of their patients, and their possible resistance to new technology. A writing instrument not only related to the campaign slogan, but also tied together a classic promo item with the imprint promoting a digital service.

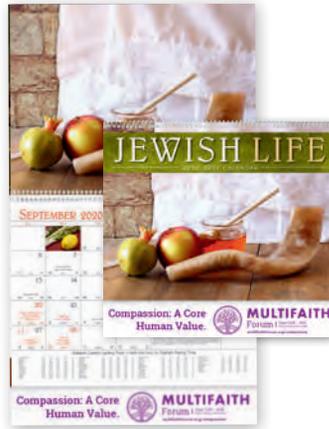

The clinic chose this Souvenir® pen because of the clean, modern look of bright white alongside red, their corporate color. They were given away at the pharmacy counter, clinic check-out and drive-thru prescription pick-up window. The campaign received positive feedback across all age groups and sign-ups for the program exceeded projections.

Purpose: Remind clients to re-book

A non-profit religious organization specializing in global mission trip planning wanted to remind groups to book upcoming service trips. They saw their re-booking numbers decline the previous year and were looking to promote the benefits of pre-planning. The organization decided to send a mailer to existing clients that included this Triumph® calendar because it showcased beautiful landscapes alongside inspiring scripture. The calendar was sent with a letter containing special offers when pre-booking group trips by specific dates.

The organization saw a 30% increase in inquiries almost immediately after the calendars were mailed. Plus, they saw an increase in re-bookings each month, proving the calendars helped keep their services top-of-mind throughout the year.

ADHESIVE NOTEPADS CASE STUDY

Client: Home Insurance Company

Purpose: Tradeshow giveaway

A home insurance company was participating in a home show with a booth that promoted natural disaster preparedness. They wanted a giveaway item that would be useful to prospective clients and was also made in the U.S.A.

They decided to giveaway these BIC® Sticky Note™ notepads, setting the artwork up like a checklist with their company information at the top. Visitors to the booth were encouraged to add the notepads to their disaster preparedness kits so they could plan well and have their insurance information handy. The insurance company was so pleased with the response, they placed a re-order to giveaway the notepads at all remaining events for the year.
